To aid in the long-term professional development of employees, Daleel approached Outward Bound Oman to facilitate a three-day programme designed to strengthen teamwork, and increase staff morale.

Outward Bound Oman delivered a three-day course based around four key objectives:

1. To support the company's business performance.
2. To focus on communication issues between departments and employees.
3. To ignite the spirit of achievement, high performance, excellence, and trust, and boost staff morale.
4. To deliver activities than focus on developing the following skills; leadership, time management, personal responsibility, planning, problem solving and self-reliance.

The course, designed by Outward Bound Oman's experienced instructors was delivered in an outdoor location on Jebel Akhdar, where mobile phones do not work, and where external distractions are kept to a minimum. The unique experience gave the staff from Daleel Petroleum a focused opportunity to build relationships, work together in order to overcome a series of challenges, and deal with constant uncertainty-all goals that are hard to achieve in standard, hotel or office-based development courses. Participants took personal and collective responsibility for risk management, and problem-solving activities were specifically aimed at pushing through frustration to achieve goals, deal with failure, and address effective team communication. As on every Outward Bound course, experiences were bought together during guided group discussions to relate the outcomes to reality, and map out how the learning could be transferred back into the workplace.
